FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Louisville, KY – The Professional Woman Network, a leading women’s organization for empowerment and education, announces the first National Book Tour & Women’s Conference of its kind. This one day seminar and conference is scheduled to be held in five major cities within the United States, including Louisville, Atlanta, Washington DC, Los Angeles and Orlando. The first city to proudly host the event on May 16, 2009 is Louisville, Kentucky. All five events will feature internationally recognized speakers and authors from around the country delivering powerful educational presentations, book signing platforms and networking receptions.

Attendees of each conference will be exposed to a series of personal and professional issues of interest including programs that energize, renew and inspire, provoke solutions, strategies and creative professional improvement concepts. Provocative discussions/exercises and sessions addressing masterful thinking and tackling fears & challenges are among a multitude of ways the PWN Women’s Conference will highlight personal contact with recognized experts from coast to coast.

Sponsors are welcomed and encouraged to experience the opportunity of showcasing their businesses and interacting with speakers and authors of the best-selling Professional Woman Publishing books (PWP: www.pwnbooks.com). The standard conference registration fee is $129.00 and includes lunch, beverages, conference materials, and attendance to the private book signing and author networking reception.

Sponsorship and conference information available by contacting PWN Founder and CEO, Linda Ellis Eastman at (502)566-9900 or lindaeastman@prodigy.net.
